

Two Sides of Hong Kong

I created my art to fit the Urbanscape category. I have drawn this to show the two very different, but equally important parts of Hong Kong.

On the right and left sides of the drawing I drew the traditional streets, markets, and restaurants that were built and designed many years ago, for that side I have drawn the traditional eye-catching brightly coloured signs that you often see when you are walking through the markets. Below the signs, I put the products on display in front of the shops, you can see that I drew bags and clothes on display. Between the two sides of the streets, I drew the more modern, and present-time side of Hong Kong, it includes some of HK's signature landmarks such as the HSBC Bank Of China tower, the I.C.C., and the Central Plaza building. Below that, I have included HK's 'iconic' boat with the bright red sails. I have decided to include this boat as fishing in boats is an important element to Hong Kong since fishing has been important for decades.

To summarise, my art shows that, these two sides are very different, they are both very important as these are what makes Hong Kong important, interesting, unique, and different.
